WOMEN THREE DECKER HATS

Short Sketches From Our New York
Correspondent—Fresh Fish at Sea a New Wonder—Chancellor Day Breaks Out Again.

NEW YORK, Oct. 26.—Twelve buildings with an aggregate height of more than three quarters of a mile and having 290 stories will be New York's record in the skyscraper line when the construction now underway is finished. For a concentration of lofty buildings, this dozen, all grouped within a few steps of one another in the downtown district, will surpass anything of the sort that all the rest of the world can put forward, even though this charm of stone and steel does not take into consideration the skyscrapers uptown. The average height of each building is more than 24 stories and it would take less time to walk from one to any other than to climb the stairs in the shortest, which rises a mere 21 stories into the air, or just half as far as its tallest neighbor. The value of these 12 buildings is upward of $25,000,000, and their floor area more than 3,600,000 square feet, or nearly 90 acres, all of which rents on an average for something like $2 a foot. Fifteen, 20 or even 25,000 tons of steel is no uncommon amount to go into one of these monsters, which often extend 75 or 100 feet below the street level. In spite of the remarkable size of the group, however, the average rate of construction under favorable circumstances is about four stories a week.

The three-decker feminine hat has arrived—a fact which so far as women are concerned is of more importance than war on politics. Mere men will have to continue to get along with one hat at a time, but thanks to the ingeniousness of a New York milliner, from whose fertile brain the triple hat for women was evolved this week, the fair sex will no longer find it necessary to rush home every few hours to make a change of headgear in keeping with the time of day. The new creation which is causing so much excitement is really a three-story hat; that is, it is composed of three layers, one for morning wear on top, below it one for the afternoon, and at the bottom of all an evening hat. At all times it is said it has the appearance of a single hat although of triple construction and at its first exhibition here it was hailed by women enthusiasts as the greatest achievement since the building the pyramids. Its popularity received only a temporary setback from the query raised by some unsympathetic masculine critic as to what the owner of a three-story hat could do with the top layers when removed. Obviously she could not go home to take them off as it was invented to obviate the necessity of returning to one's home, but its inventors had entirely overlooked this point. It was finally decided, however, that the sections could be sent home by messenger boy and so New York will not be surprised to see long processions of uniformed youngsters passing along the avenues with installments of the new sectioned hat.

"Both hands on your pocketbook," has become the attitude of the average citizen toward Standard Oil, or the other great industrial enterprises that have recently been on the rack. But if John D. Rockefeller and his associates have no other supporters they still find defenders among the ranks of the clergy. Following on the heels of public utterance by Dr. McArthur and Dr. E. Benjamin Andrews in support of the methods of the men behind the big oil corporation, Chancellor Day of Syracuse University has returned to the fray. The Syracuse educator has discovered that we are living under a virtual monarchy in the United States and he sets forth this view in a scathing attack on President Roosevelt and his politics in the current number of Appleton's under the heading "The Raid on Prosperity."

While declining to become as excited as Dr. Day over the coming of monarchical rule, New Yorkers enjoy a good scrap, especially one in which gentlemen of the cloth participate because it is pretty certain to be acrimonious, and it must be said that Chancellor Day handles his subject with vigor and without gloves. If Dr. Parkhurst would now come out in defence of the Harriman methods of high finance New Yorkers would consider themselves in for a season of entertainment.

Wonders of transatlantic travel crowd on each other so fast nowadays that the average New Yorker has hardly time to philosophize over one before something else turns up. The giant 700 foot Lusitania still attracts the attention of thousands, but interest is already turning. The very latest thing is an ocean liner in which live fish are kept for the table. That a vessel which plies the broad Atlantic should attract attention in this manner smacks of the ridiculous, moving as she does in the very home of fishes, but nevertheless until the arrival of the Amerika this week. Atlantic liners have always carried their fish from port to port dead and stored away for the simple reason that at the present day rate of steaming no one could catch a fish, even if he were to try. On the Amerika however the novel scheme is just being introduced of having an aquarium on board stocked with live trout from which the sated millionaire may select any fish that appeal to his jaded palate with certainty that it will be served to him fresh. Taking fish to sea, however, simple as it sounds is still too much like taking coals to Newcastle not to appeal to the average person.

New York not only uses more telephones than any other city in the world but manufactures more than all the rest of the country combined. This fact was brought out in connection with the announcement that the Western Electric Company which makes all the instruments used by the various Bell companies at its huge West street plant, in this city is to sell telephones to the general public. Something like 3,000,000 instruments a year, or more than 5000 complete telephones every day, is New York's contribution to the business of vocal communication to supply the demands of the Bell interests. The telephone business, though now thirty years old, has had its great expansion in the past ten years and 28,000 persons are employed in the making of various parts by this one company alone. Heretofore it has not been possible for an individual or for a group of neighbors with a private telephone line to buy the instruments used by the Bell system, but this is now to be changed. The big company admits that its refusal to sell instruments in the past has caused it to be regarded as a monopoly and says that in taking its present step it has in view the cultivation of better relations with the public on the part of its various subsidiaries.

Afflicted with Sore Eyes for 33 Years.
I have been afflicted with sore eyes for thirty-three years. Thirteen years ago I became totally blind and was blind for six years. My eyes were badly inflamed. One of my neighbors insisted upon my trying Chamberlain's Salve and gave me half a box of it. To my surprise it healed my eyes and my sight came back to me.—P. C. Earle, Cynthia, Ky. Chamberlain's Salve is for sale by Frank Hart and Leading Druggists.

SCHOONER GOES ASHORE.

SEATTLE, Oct. 26.—Steamship Ohio which arrived from Nome yesterday with six hundred passengers, brings word of the loss of the schooner Bender Brothers off the Kuskowim River. The master of the schooner returned on the Ohio. The Bender Brothers left San Francisco August 21, with supplies for the missions on the Kuskowim. She was driven ashore at the mouth of the river during a great gale and was left high on the beach. The crew had a narrow escape. After spending a month trying to float the vessel, Captain Jutens gave up the attempt.

The Secret of a Beautiful Face

lies in keeping the skin protected as well as cleansed. Just washing is not enough—that only leaves the delicate surface more exposed to the irritation of dust and germs; to merciless attacks of sun and weather. After washing, apply Robertine and experience its delightful refreshment. You will admire the lineless softness it imparts to face, neck and arms. It not only stimulates a radiant glow, but protects the skin from becoming coarse. Prevents burning, tan and freckles.
